

ANDREWS GUILTY; FACES SENTENCE

Held in Jail Infirmary

Attorney Dean Adams, which could run as long as five years.

Andrews J. was convicted of perjury early today.

He remains in the infirmary of a Parish Prison, awaiting his sentence.

Andrews J. was convicted at a trial in three of five counts of perjury in connection with the investigation of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

Even in defeat—after the five-man jury returned its verdict—Andrews managed a smattering of dirty humor.

"I really shouldn't complain," he said. "If I didn't have bad luck, I couldn't have any at all."

THROUGHOUT THE TRIAL, then, five-day, week-end trial. Andrews joked with reporters and court attachés about the possibility of going to jail.

After his first visit to Parish Prison for a meal, on the initial day of the trial, Andrews bantered:

"Now if the beds are as good as the food, we're in business."

But his conviction brought an immediate announcement from attorney Harry Burglass that the case will be appealed.

Andrews spent his first night in the prison infirmary, not because he was ill but because it offers better cleaner accommodations than the cells.

The case went to the jury before midnight after a marathon five-day debate that included a Sunday session so unusual that Judge Shea had to check out its legality in the law books.

victed of lying in his testimony concerning the mysterious Clay Bertrand.

Garrison contends that Clay Shaw and Clay Bertrand are the same person and has charged Shaw with conspiring with Lee Harvey Oswald and the late David W. Ferrie to kill the president.

The jury convicted Andrews after deliberating for two hours and 40 minutes.

IN FINAL ARGUMENTS, the prosecuting attorney contended that Andrews lied to the grand jury on a number of occasions.

Asst. Dist. Atty. James Alcock often pointed after points on which he said Andrews lied to the grand jury and to the Warren Commission in 1963.

After listing a number of statements made by Andrews at various times and places about Clay Bertrand's identity, Alcock concluded:

"These statements and positions are irreconcilable."

At another point Alcock said, "This man tells so many lies you can't tell when he's telling the truth."

Of Bertrand, Alcock said that Andrews had testified that "he is or he isn't, he doesn't exist, or he's Gene Davis."

DAVIS IS A bar owner who Andrews has said is Clay Bertrand. Yesterday he took the stand to say he had known Andrews for 13 or 20 years but had never used the name of Bertrand.

Defense attorney Burglass contended that Andrews consistently told the truth in his appearances before the grand jury, and what he said elsewhere had no bearing on the case.

He said Andrews was being railroaded by the district attorney's office because he would not cooperate by telling the grand jury that Clay Shaw was Clay Bertrand.

Burglass contended that the state's whole case was based on statements made by Andrews and, for this reason, had no legal foundation.

"Our liberty is too valuable to let people use their own mouths to convict themselves," he said.

THE ATTORNEY said of Andrews, "He does attention most of us do. He got squirreled up into the biggest investigation of a murder this country has ever seen."

The State vs. Shaw. They wanted him to change his story. They wanted Andrews to equate Shaw and Bertrand, but he said that kind of a guy.

"So comes that massive foot. It was coming down on Dean. You the jury are the only thing between that massive foot and Dean."

BURGGLASS made much of the four indictments against Andrews. He said it must be the biggest in the history of the courts. He said the four-long indictment beatified by Robert Kennedy. Believe it or not.

Denying the lengthy legal document, Alcock told the jury, "We can't help it if Dean Andrews lies a lot."

But Burglass maintained that Andrews did not lie.

"He told them the truth. But he's got a jiv way of doing it. He told them Clay Shaw was not Clay Bertrand, but they say he lied."

"MOST OF us lie him."

drum beats. But something exciting happened to Dean Bertrand. Up until that time, he didn't have an enemy in the world. He was on TV, he was here, he was there. He got stirred up into something a lot bigger than anything he had ever dreamed.

Alcock contended that a desire for attention is not an excuse for lying to the grand jury.

In an apparent effort to show that Garrison was out to get Andrews, the defense placed Newsweek magazine correspondent Hugh Aynesworth on the stand.

Aynesworth testified to an interview with Garrison that took place the day after Andrews was arrested.

Ainsworth said he asked Garrison what part Andrews played in the investigation.

"Garrison told me, 'Andrews doesn't know anything, but he's been hell . . . for weeks now and I'm going to get him, or fix him, or something like that.' Andrews was arrested that same day."

The testimony was ruled hearsay by Judge Shea and the jury never heard it.

THE DEFENSE PLAYED

back the entire 1½-hour tape of Andrews in his appearance before the grand jury. He was asked about Oswald coming to his office for legal advice.

"Just my bad luck the cat walked into my office," said Andrews. "Of all the offices he has to walk into mine. I've been isolated since 1963, when I told the Warren Commission about it by experts, quasi-experts and writers and reporters and teachers and you."

Asst. Dist. Atty. Richard Barnes, who was cross-examining Andrews, at the time he appeared before the grand jury asked him if he knew who President Kennedy.

An exasperated Andrews replied, "Do I know? Oh, man, don't be tedious. If I knew I could have put down like a thousand pound canary. I like this country too, you know."

Throughout his appearance before the grand jury, Andrews had indicated through his statements that he believed the state was attempting to trap him into a lie.

"You are lookin' down my throat with a loaded shotgun."

he said at one point.

At another time he said: "You guys are looking for the highest law, and unfortunately I am St. Peter."

He repeatedly asked for a transcript of earlier questioning in the district attorney's office so that he could refresh his memory. Andrews said he had been promised the transcript.

Finally he told his inquisitor: "I get the impression you want me to identify Clay Shaw as Clay Bertrand."

THROUGHOUT the long session, the defense repeatedly asked the court to declare a mistrial and on two occasions asked for a directed verdict in favor of Andrews.

The defense took at least 40 minutes of exceptions to the prosecution's case after once denied their objections.

This morning Andrews ate his breakfast of scrambled eggs, milk and coffee but for once, refused to talk to a reporter. He said his attorneys had advised him against it.
